Empowering Cities as Drivers of Change

Welcome from the GPM Chair

It is my great pleasure to welcome all participants to the GPM's third Annual Summit in Bristol.

This summit must fulfil the dreams and wishes of the late Dr Benjamin Barber, the founder of the GPM. We are delighted that this year we will host the summit with a double expansion of Mayors and 100 participants compared to last year's summit that took place in Stavanger. This is a clear sign that the principles of the GPM unify and strengthen city leadership, responding to the needs of Mayors all around the world.

I believe Mayors are the drivers of change and that we are the agents responsible for bringing about transformation in our cities. The GPM strengthens the leadership of Mayors to advocate for solutions to critical global issues at the international level.

As the GPM, we are also honoured to welcome many international city networks to the annual summit. The GPM is proud to be a member of the UCLG Global Taskforce and has established many more global strategic partnerships. The GPM aims to find new and innovative ways to establish strong collaboration and unification between Mayors. By working closely together with other city networks and strategic partners the voice of city leaders will be heard at an international level.

Our work must constantly be amplified because the task ahead of us is great. In this regard, the GPM aims to grow to a membership base of 1,000 cities by 2030 and to become a recognised force in the 21st century solely guided by Mayors. The unification of Mayors is the most important aspect of the GPM to make the voice of empowered cities strong, clear and unavoidable.

As Chair of the GPM I encourage more cities to become members of the GPM and ask my fellow Mayors to be part of a revolutionary path to empower the voice of Mayors and citizens altogether. The voices of cities matter especially in this day and age where Mayors tackle issues on urban security, migration and health.

I wish all my fellow Mayors, strategic partners and experts of the GPM a prosperous and successful summit and may we turn our engagements into positive actions for our citizens.

The Bristol Housing Festival is a local initiative that funds the development of various new prototype housing communities across the city with the aim of tackling the shortage of affordable housing. Acting as an incubator to road-test a range of existing concepts and innovative solutions the festival aims to speed up the delivery of quality, affordable housing in the city.

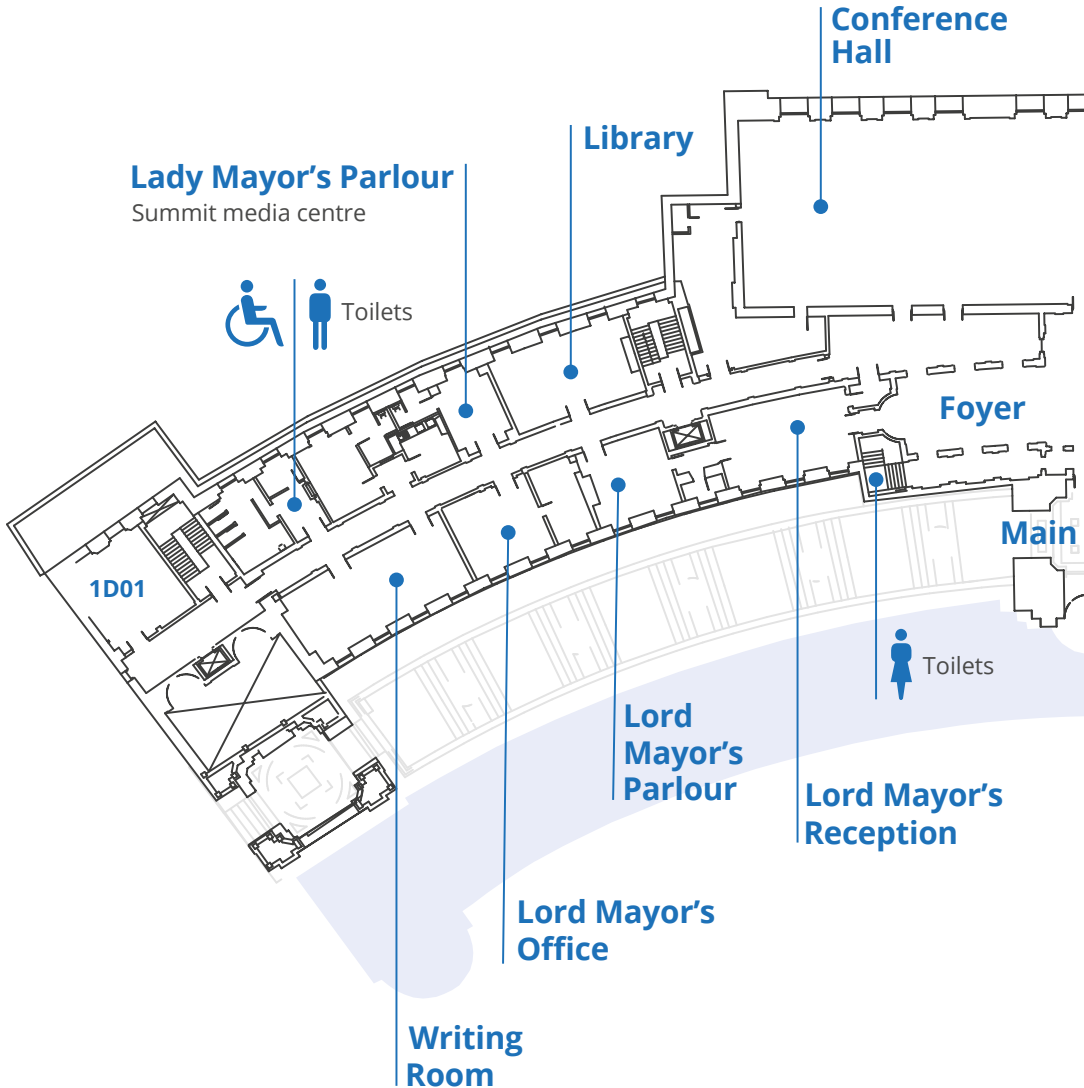

The festival launch, which includes a public expo displaying a range of new concept houses and full scale off site manufactured houses, was planned to coincide with the GPM Annual Summit and there will be a group innovation to visit at 2pm where many of the exhibitors will be available for you to speak to in person. Following the launch, the Festival will run for five years, in which time various new communities will be commissioned, funded and built across the city.

The UN Sustainable Development Goals

“Cities are where the battle for sustainable development will be won — or lost” UN Secretary General, 2015

The UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) provide a unified global strategy for what we want the world to look like in 2030. They address transboundary challenges that will require coordinated action, with cities recognized as critical players.

The SDGs can provide a framework for understanding which activities and initiatives in a city are interrelated and as such where synergy and interconnections can be best utilised.

The Global Parliament of Mayors prioritises actions that generate positive impact in cities around the world, and contribute to the UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). You will see references to different SDGs throughout the programme.

Sustainable sourcing at the GPM Summit 2018

The GPM Summit 2018 event team has worked to respond to the SDGs including SDG12; responsible production and consumption. For example, the paper used in printing is from sustainable sources and providing local and ethical food and drink has been a focus.

Bristol is a Fair Trade City, www.fairtradetowns.org and is recognised for its efforts to make healthy, sustainable, ethical and local food a defining characteristic of the city. As one of just three UK cities to have gained a ‘Silver level’ Sustainable Food City award, Bristol aims to become the UK’s first city to achieve a ‘Gold’ award in 2020.

Below are three examples of SDG activity that is occurring in Cape Town, Mannheim and Bristol, demonstrating how cities can work to address local priorities while simultaneously contributing to global efforts to meet the SDGs.

Cape Town: Mayor Patricia de Lille – GPM Chair

Cape Town is progressively increasing its awareness and engagement with the SDGs. City officials were previously involved in the Mistra Urban Futures SDG indicator pilot project, as well as the World Council on City Data ISO 37120 certification process. In 2016, the City of Cape Town's data was certified as 'aspirational' and it is just four indicators away from reaching gold status for this ISO certification. As a member of the Rockefeller 100 Resilient Cities Network, the City is preparing its City Resilience Index (e.g. it has launched its Preliminary Resilience Assessment in September 2018) and in this process synergies are sought with the SDGs and NUA in order to localize these objectives through a resilience lens. Additionally, the first UN World Data Forum (WDF) was hosted by Statistics South Africa in Cape Town. <http://localizingthesdgs.org/library/415/Implementing-the-New-Urban-Agenda-and-SDGs-comparative-urban-perspectives.pdf>

Mannheim: Mayor Peter Kurz – GPM Vice Chair

Mannheim is combining its implementation of the SDG with the development of a municipal plan called 'Mannheim 2030'. On behalf of the World Urban Campaign (WUC) of UN Habitat, the City of Mannheim organized two Urban Thinkers Campuses to help create its city plan in a participatory way. Together with 500 citizens and global and local experts the city of Mannheim had discussions about how the SDGs can be implemented in a municipality, its budget and how the SDGs can be used to develop the city and make it resilient, sustainable and globally helpful. As a result of this work Mannheim has established 12 of the 17 SDGs as priority goals to focus on. <http://www.worldurbancampaign.org/report-mannheim-2030-reimagining-future-reimagining-city-localization-sdgs>

Bristol: Mayor Marvin Rees – GPM Treasurer

Bristol's Mayor, Marvin Rees, has recently appointed an SDG Ambassador in his Cabinet to champion the goals and their adoption across the city. Additionally, unique collaboration between the City Office team, the University of Bristol and the Bristol Green Capital Partnership (BGCP) has supported the integration of the SDG targets and indicators into the city's new plan. Targets and indicators were tested for relevance using a method similar to the 'Hacking the SDGs' paper by Solomon Greene and Brady Meixell. These targets were mapped into the themes of Bristol's One City Plan and will be owned by the different strategic boards. Lastly, Bristol boasts a network of stakeholders from the public, private and third sector called the Bristol SDG Alliance. The Alliance works to coordinate SDG action in the city and acts as an advocacy, knowledge sharing and networking hub for those interested in the SDGs.

Join the Global Parliament of Mayors and be the Voice of Empowered Cities

Why become a GPM Member?

The GPM strengthens the voice of cities in global governance structures and elevates the voice of city networks on key global challenges: Migration, Health and Urban Security.

- Strengthen your leadership and advocate for global issues at the international level
- Communicate directly with fellow Mayors
- Exclusive access to the Virtual Platform for Mayors
- Receive personal support from fellow GPM Mayors and experts to exchange skills and knowledge
- Free participation at the annual GPM Summit
- Contribute to city-to-city partnerships and enhance cooperation, connectivity and solidarity among city leaders

How to become a GPM member?

It takes only one step for Mayors to become a GPM member. Contact gpm@denhaag.nl and fill in the registration form.

How much is the Membership fee?

The GPM strives for inclusion by connecting cities of all sizes at the global level. Annual membership fees are based on the Gross National Income and the Population of the city, and range from €483 to €7,734.

What?

The Global Parliament of Mayors (GPM) is a governance body of, by and for Mayors from around the world. It builds on the experience, expertise and leadership of Mayors who tackle global issues at a local level.

GPM facilitates city-to-city collaboration and uses local knowledge to practical, action-oriented solutions. GPM has its own Executive Committee that strives for regional representation and works action orientation.

How?

The GPM has an ambitious agenda. The GPM aims to grow to a membership base of 1,000 cities by 2030, to become a recognised force in the 21st century solely guided by Mayors offering a common global voice for cities all over the world against international organisations. The GPM offers to support the multitude of global networks that cities can be involved in today.

GPM Mayors Virtual Platform

GPM members also benefit from exclusive access to the Virtual Platform with a parliamentary voting tool that gives all Mayors an equal vote. Through the platform, Mayors will be able to communicate with other GPM Mayors, vote on all GPM matters, including statements and resolutions.

The online platform not only offers us a visual representation of our GPM Mayors, but also allows members to vote anonymously if they wish to.

Meet the GPM Secretariat

The GPM Secretariat, based in the Hague, the Netherlands, will be present at the GPM Summit with our own information desk. Find our GPM desk on the right hand side of the City Hall Foyer where we can offer you further information.

We wish all our participants, GPM Mayors and strategic partners, a wonderful and prospective summit, and hope to welcome more new members to the GPM.

"I am proud to see that Mayors from all over the world are taking an increasing interest in the Global Parliament of Mayors, a governance body of, by and for Mayors. I firmly believe that Mayors and their cities are the drivers of change.

Strong Mayors drive solutions in their cities in ways that are more progressive, faster and more targeted than those put forward at a national level – where Mayors often come under fire for their innovative approaches. The GPM makes the united voice of Mayors heard at the table where decisions on critical global issues such as Migration, Urban Security and Health are made. The more Mayors that join the GPM, the stronger the GPM voice and the international impact will be."
